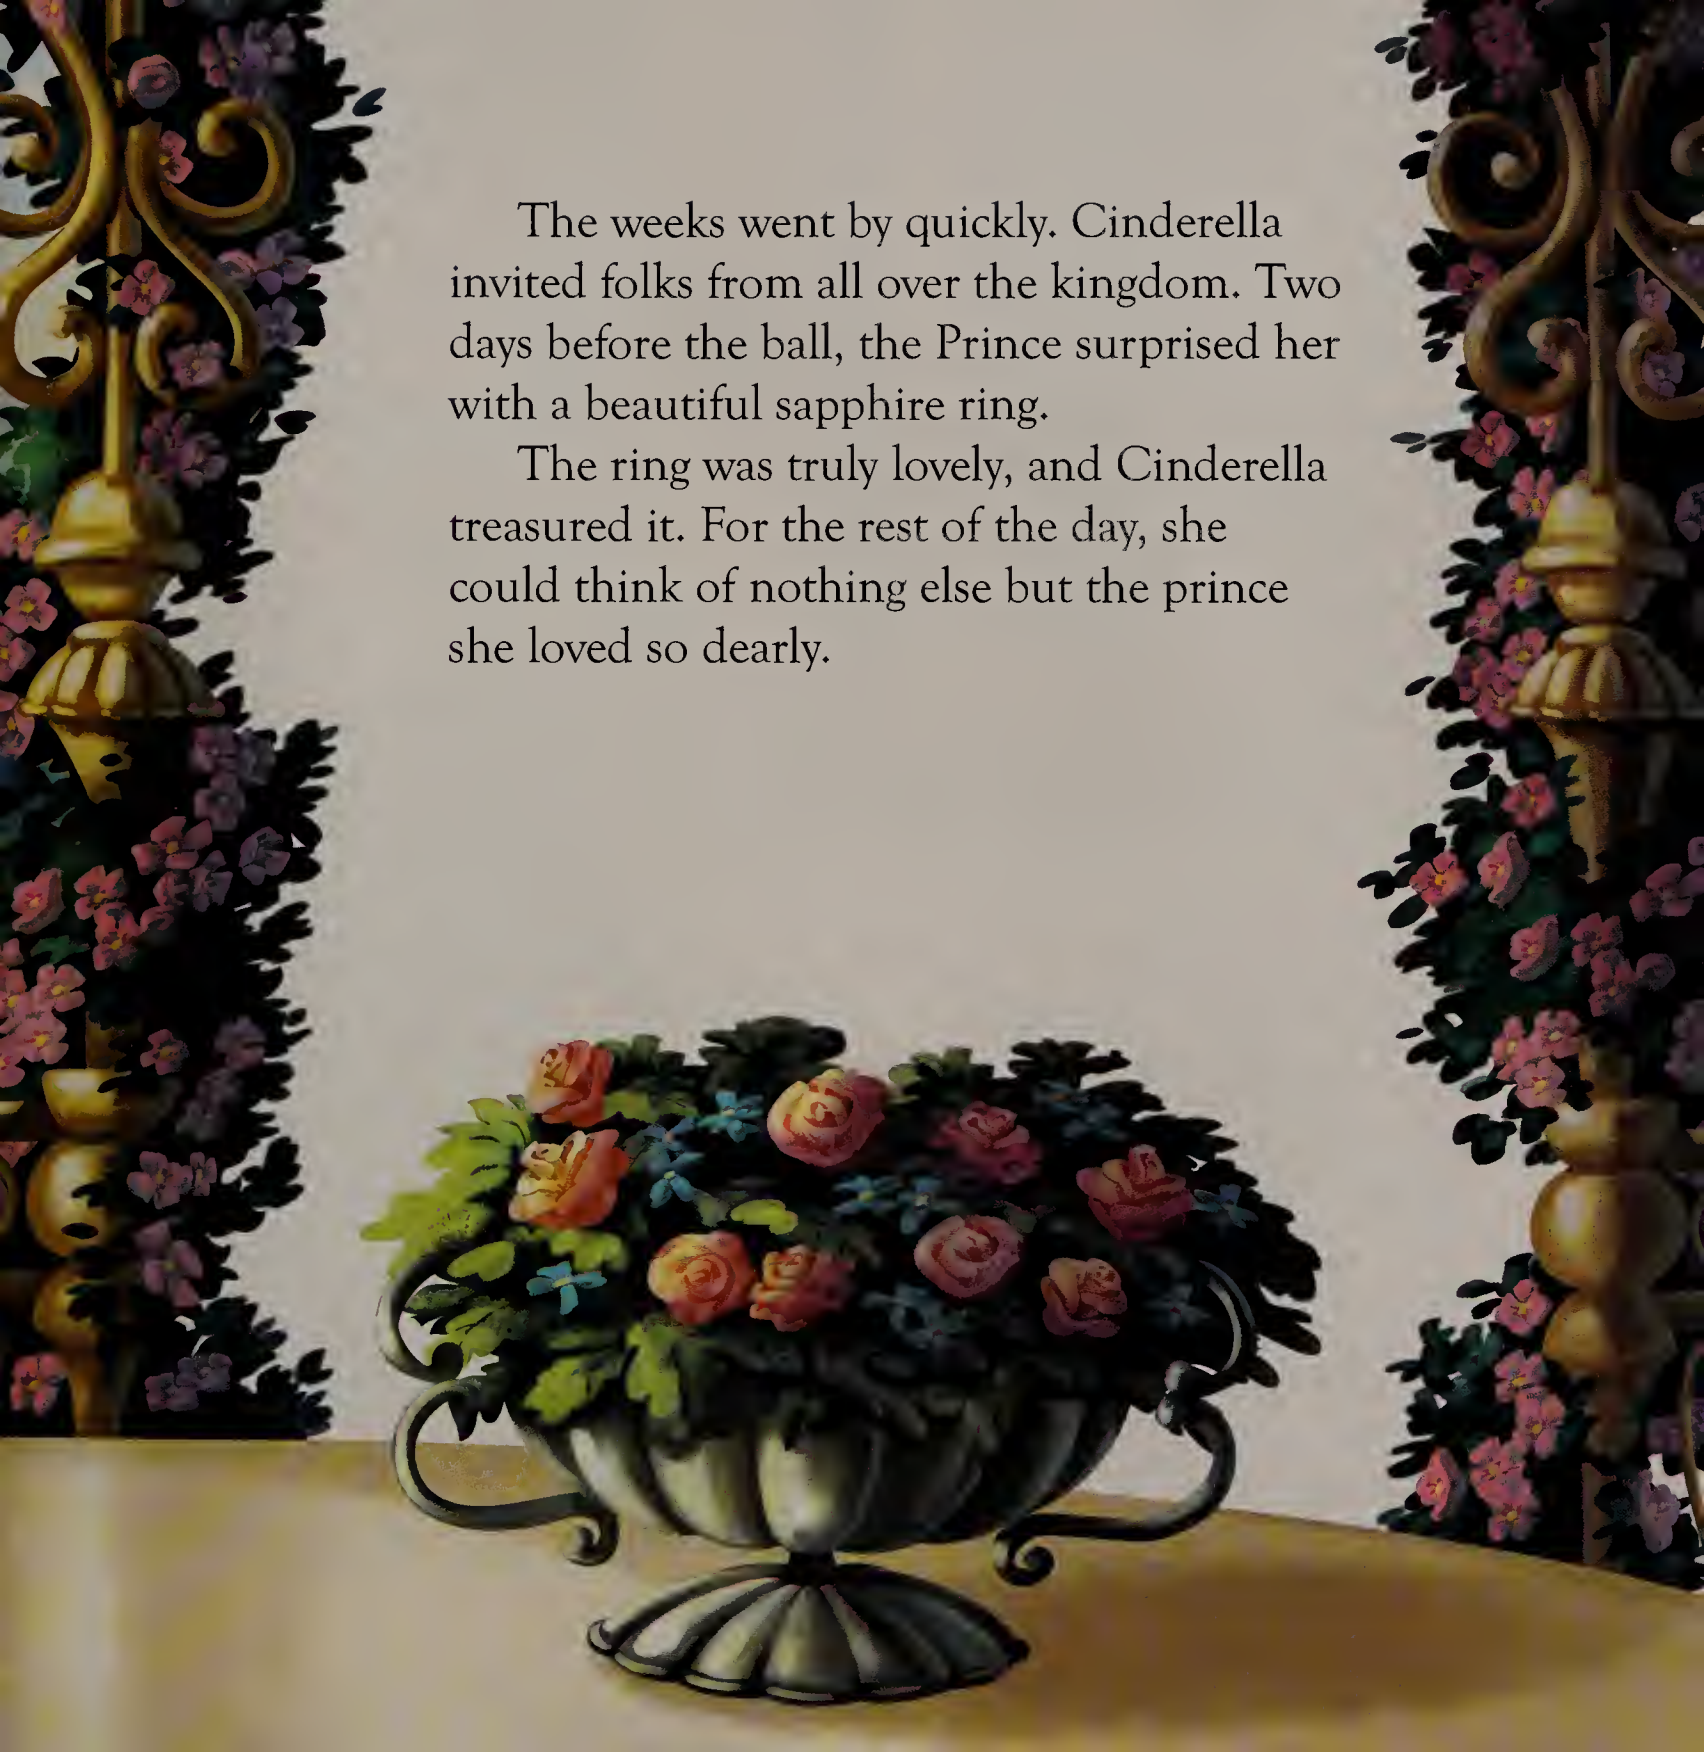
This is a tale about Cinderella and a special gift from her Prince. You can read along with me in your book. You will know it is time to turn the page when you hear a chime, like this. . . .

Let's begin now.

Cinderella and the Prince were very happy. They liked to do all kinds of fun things together, from horseback riding to going on outings with Cinderella's mouse friends.

One day, as the snow began to melt, the Prince had an idea. "Our first anniversary is just a couple of months away. I think we should plan a grand ball to celebrate."

Cinderella smiled. "That's a wonderful idea."



The weeks went by quickly. Cinderella invited folks from all over the kingdom. Two days before the ball, the Prince surprised her with a beautiful sapphire ring.

The ring was truly lovely, and Cinderella treasured it. For the rest of the day, she could think of nothing else but the prince she loved so dearly.

The next day, Cinderella realized she'd lost the ring. "Oh, no!"

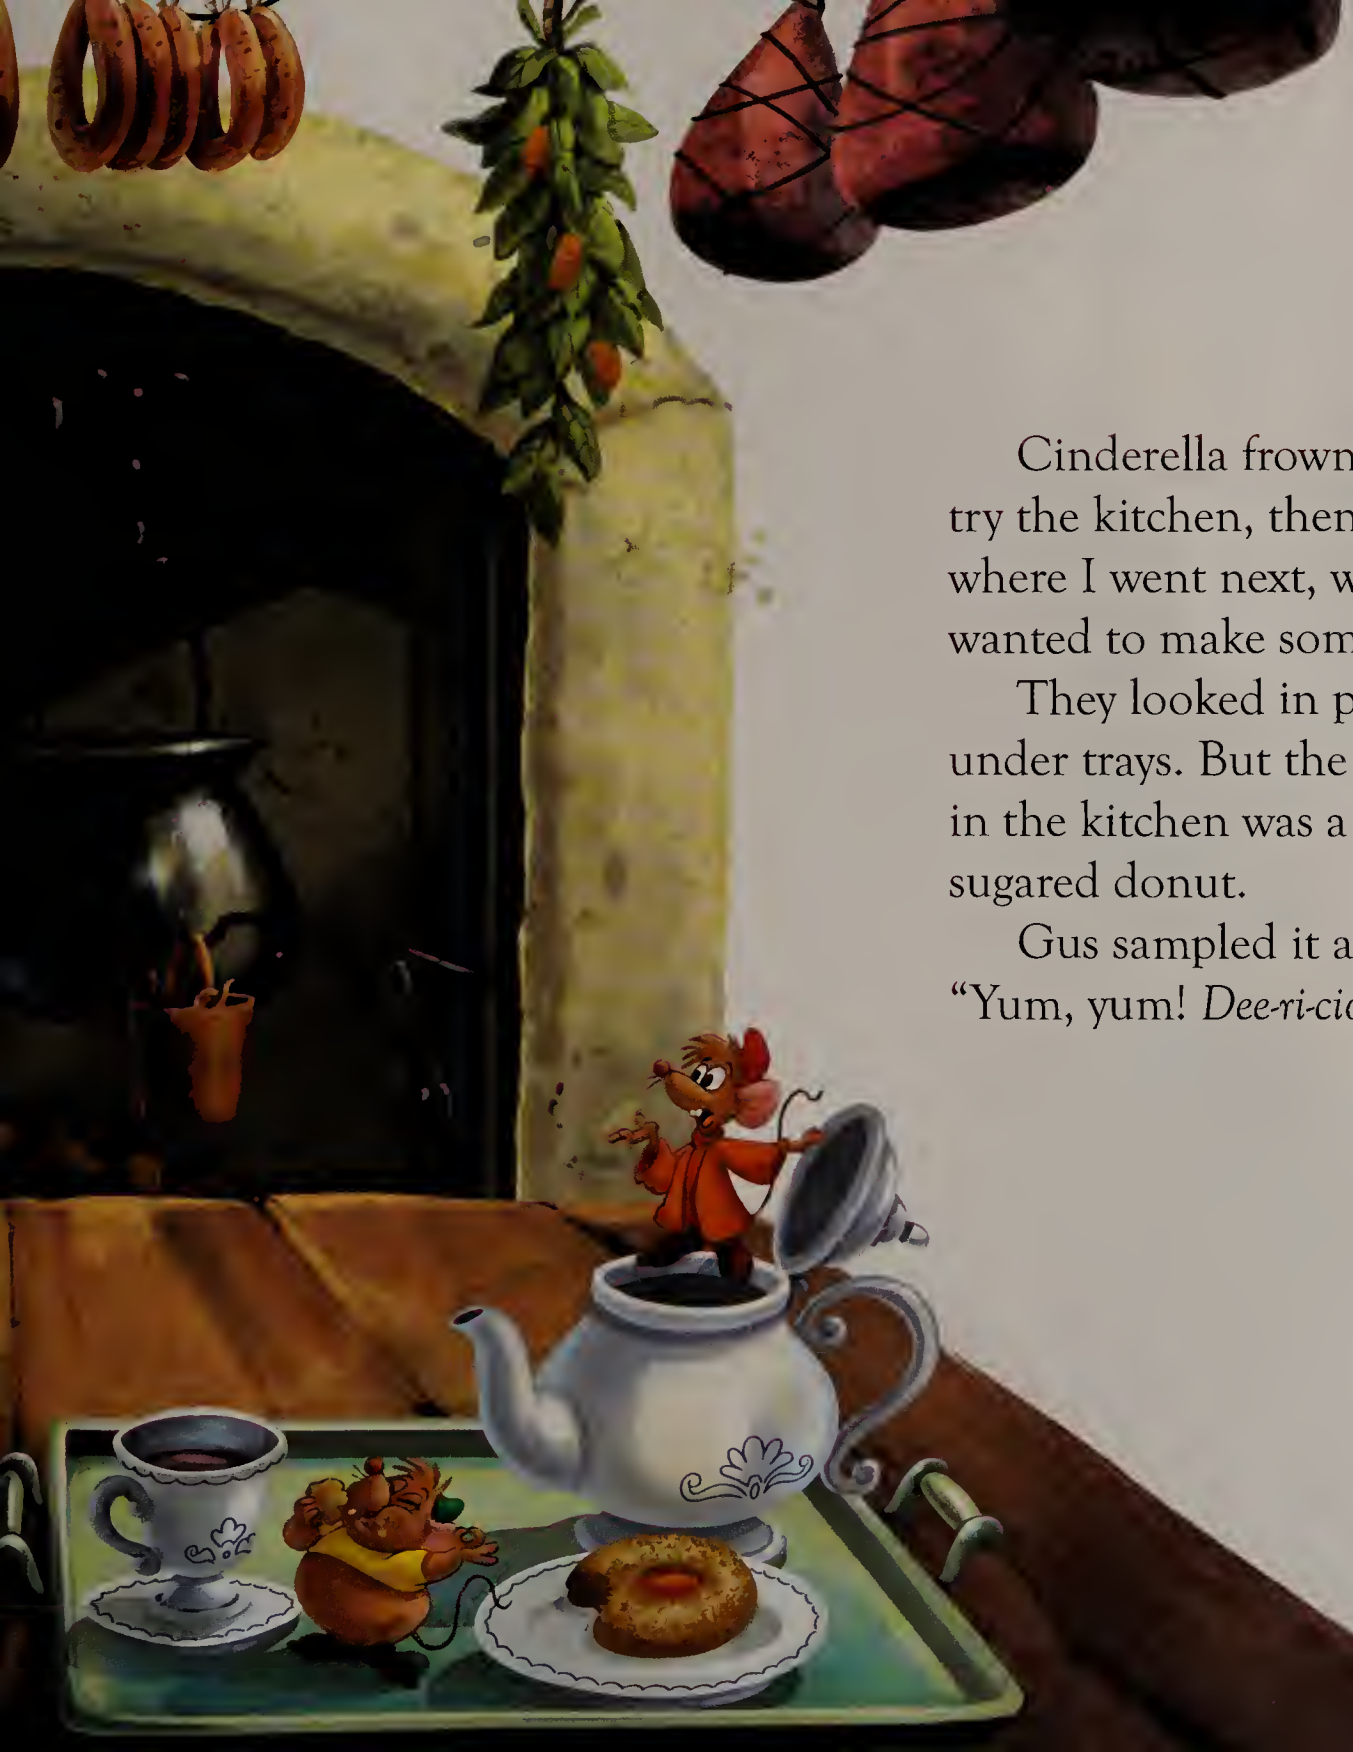
She checked her pockets and inside her long gloves, but it was nowhere to be seen.

Cinderella's mouse friends Jaq and Gus appeared. "Notta worry, Cinderelly. Us-a help-a you!"

Then Jaq had an idea: They would look in all the places the princess had been. "Where you go? Atsa where us-a look."

Cinderella smiled. "Yes, of course. The first thing I did after the Prince gave me the ring was go to my room to write in my diary."

They hurried to Cinderella's bedroom. But the ring wasn't there.



Cinderella frowned. "Let's try the kitchen, then. That's where I went next, when I wanted to make some tea."

They looked in pots and under trays. But the only ring in the kitchen was a day-old sugared donut.

Gus sampled it anyway. "Yum, yum! Dee-ri-cious!"

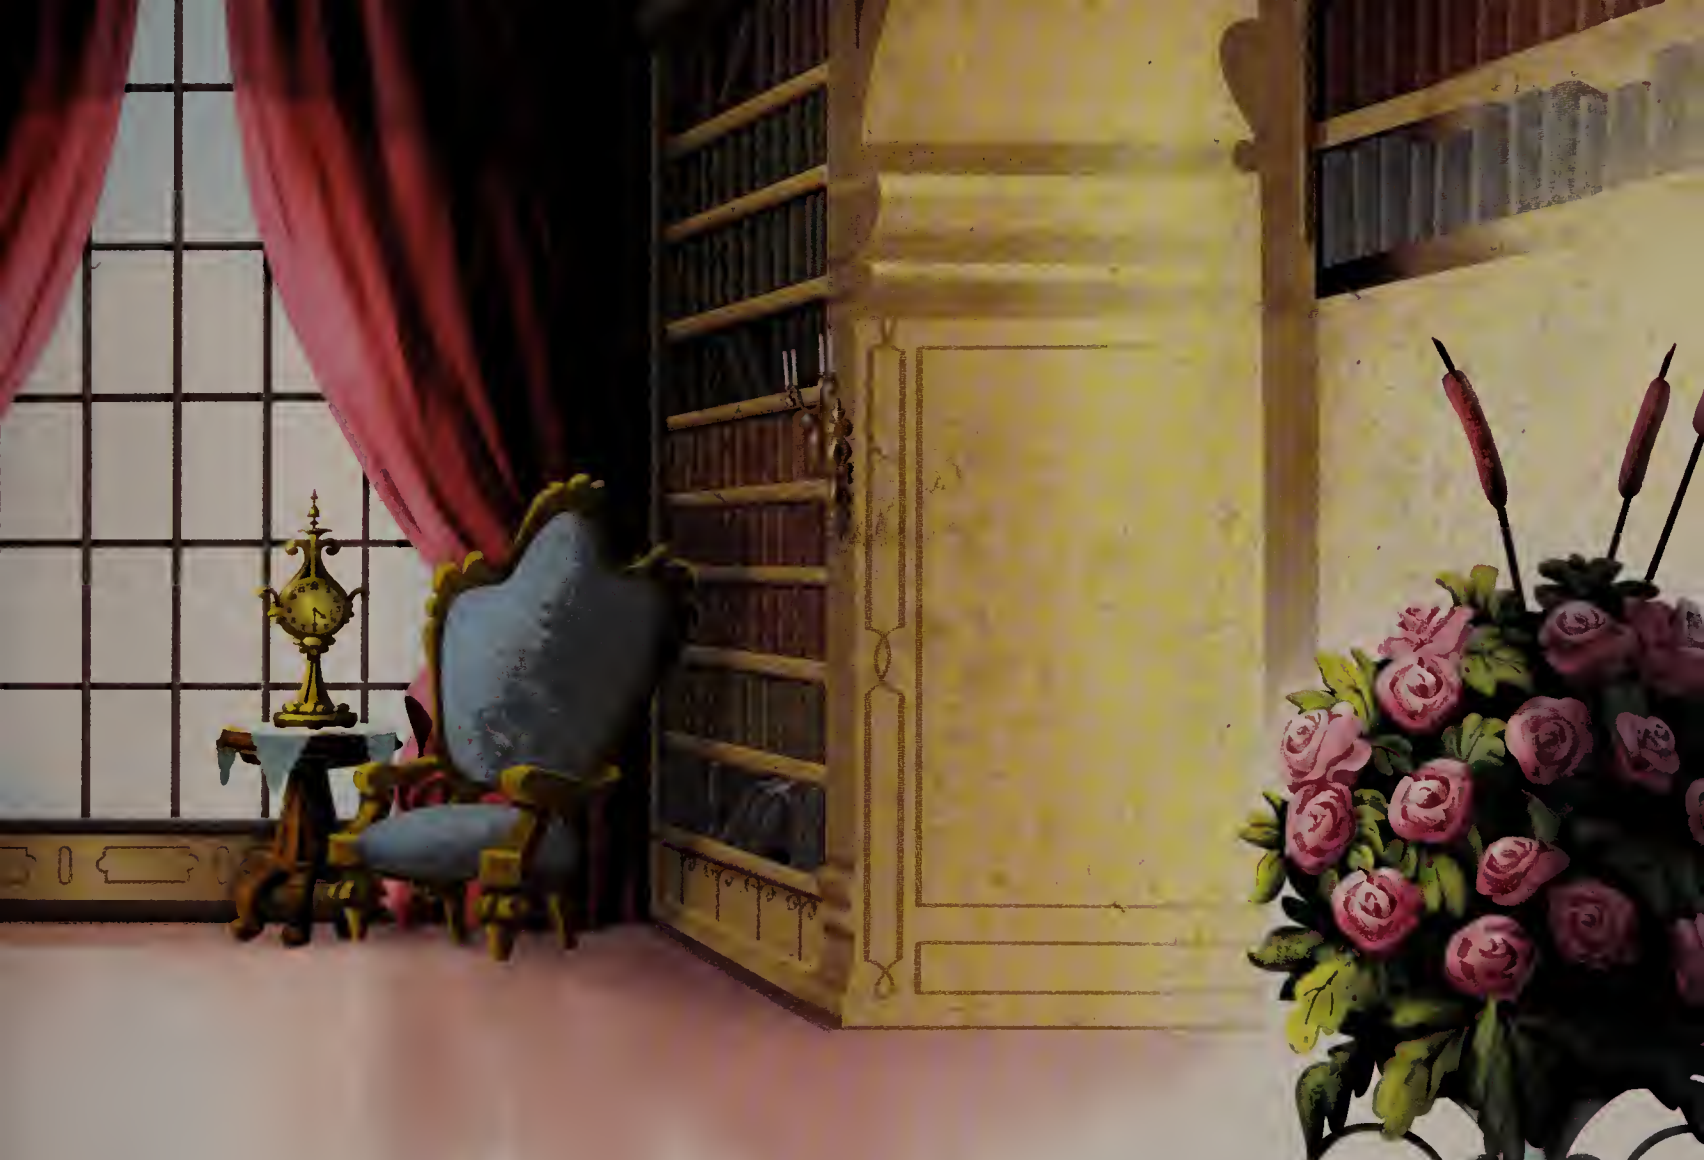
Next they hurried to the music room, where Cinderella had gone to practice a new song.

Jaq and Gus searched the piano, inside and out. Gus even played a song, hopping on the keys as he looked. Still the ring was nowhere to be found.



Cinderella hesitated for a moment. "Perhaps we should try the library. I read there for a while."

Jaq agreed. "Come on, Gus-Gus! Gotta flurry!"

Although they searched every shelf, they still couldn't find the ring.

Cinderella began to get nervous. She didn't want the Prince to notice that she'd lost his gift. She went upstairs to get ready for dinner.

The princess changed into her evening gown and started downstairs. She paused for a moment, wondering what the Prince would say when he found out.

Cinderella began to cry softly. She felt terrible.

Soon the Prince walked down the hall. He saw Cinderella crying and gave her a hug. "What's wrong, my dear?"

Cinderella explained quickly. "Somehow I lost the anniversary ring you gave me. I've looked everywhere, but I can't find it."

The Prince smiled. "I'm sure it will turn up tomorrow. And if it doesn't, I know you didn't lose it on purpose. Please don't be sad."

Cinderella looked at the Prince gratefully. She was so glad to be married to him.

The next morning, Cinderella woke up and started looking for the ring right away. She shook out the pages of her diary again.

Gus shook his head. "Notta ring for Cinderelly."

The princess went through the house again. While in the library, she remembered something. "You know, I went out to the stables to feed and brush Frou. Perhaps I lost my ring in his stall."

They raced to the stable and searched the stall, sifting through piles and piles of straw. Gus even searched Frou's feed trough. But they still couldn't find the sapphire ring.

Cinderella scratched her head. "There's only one more place that I can think to look."

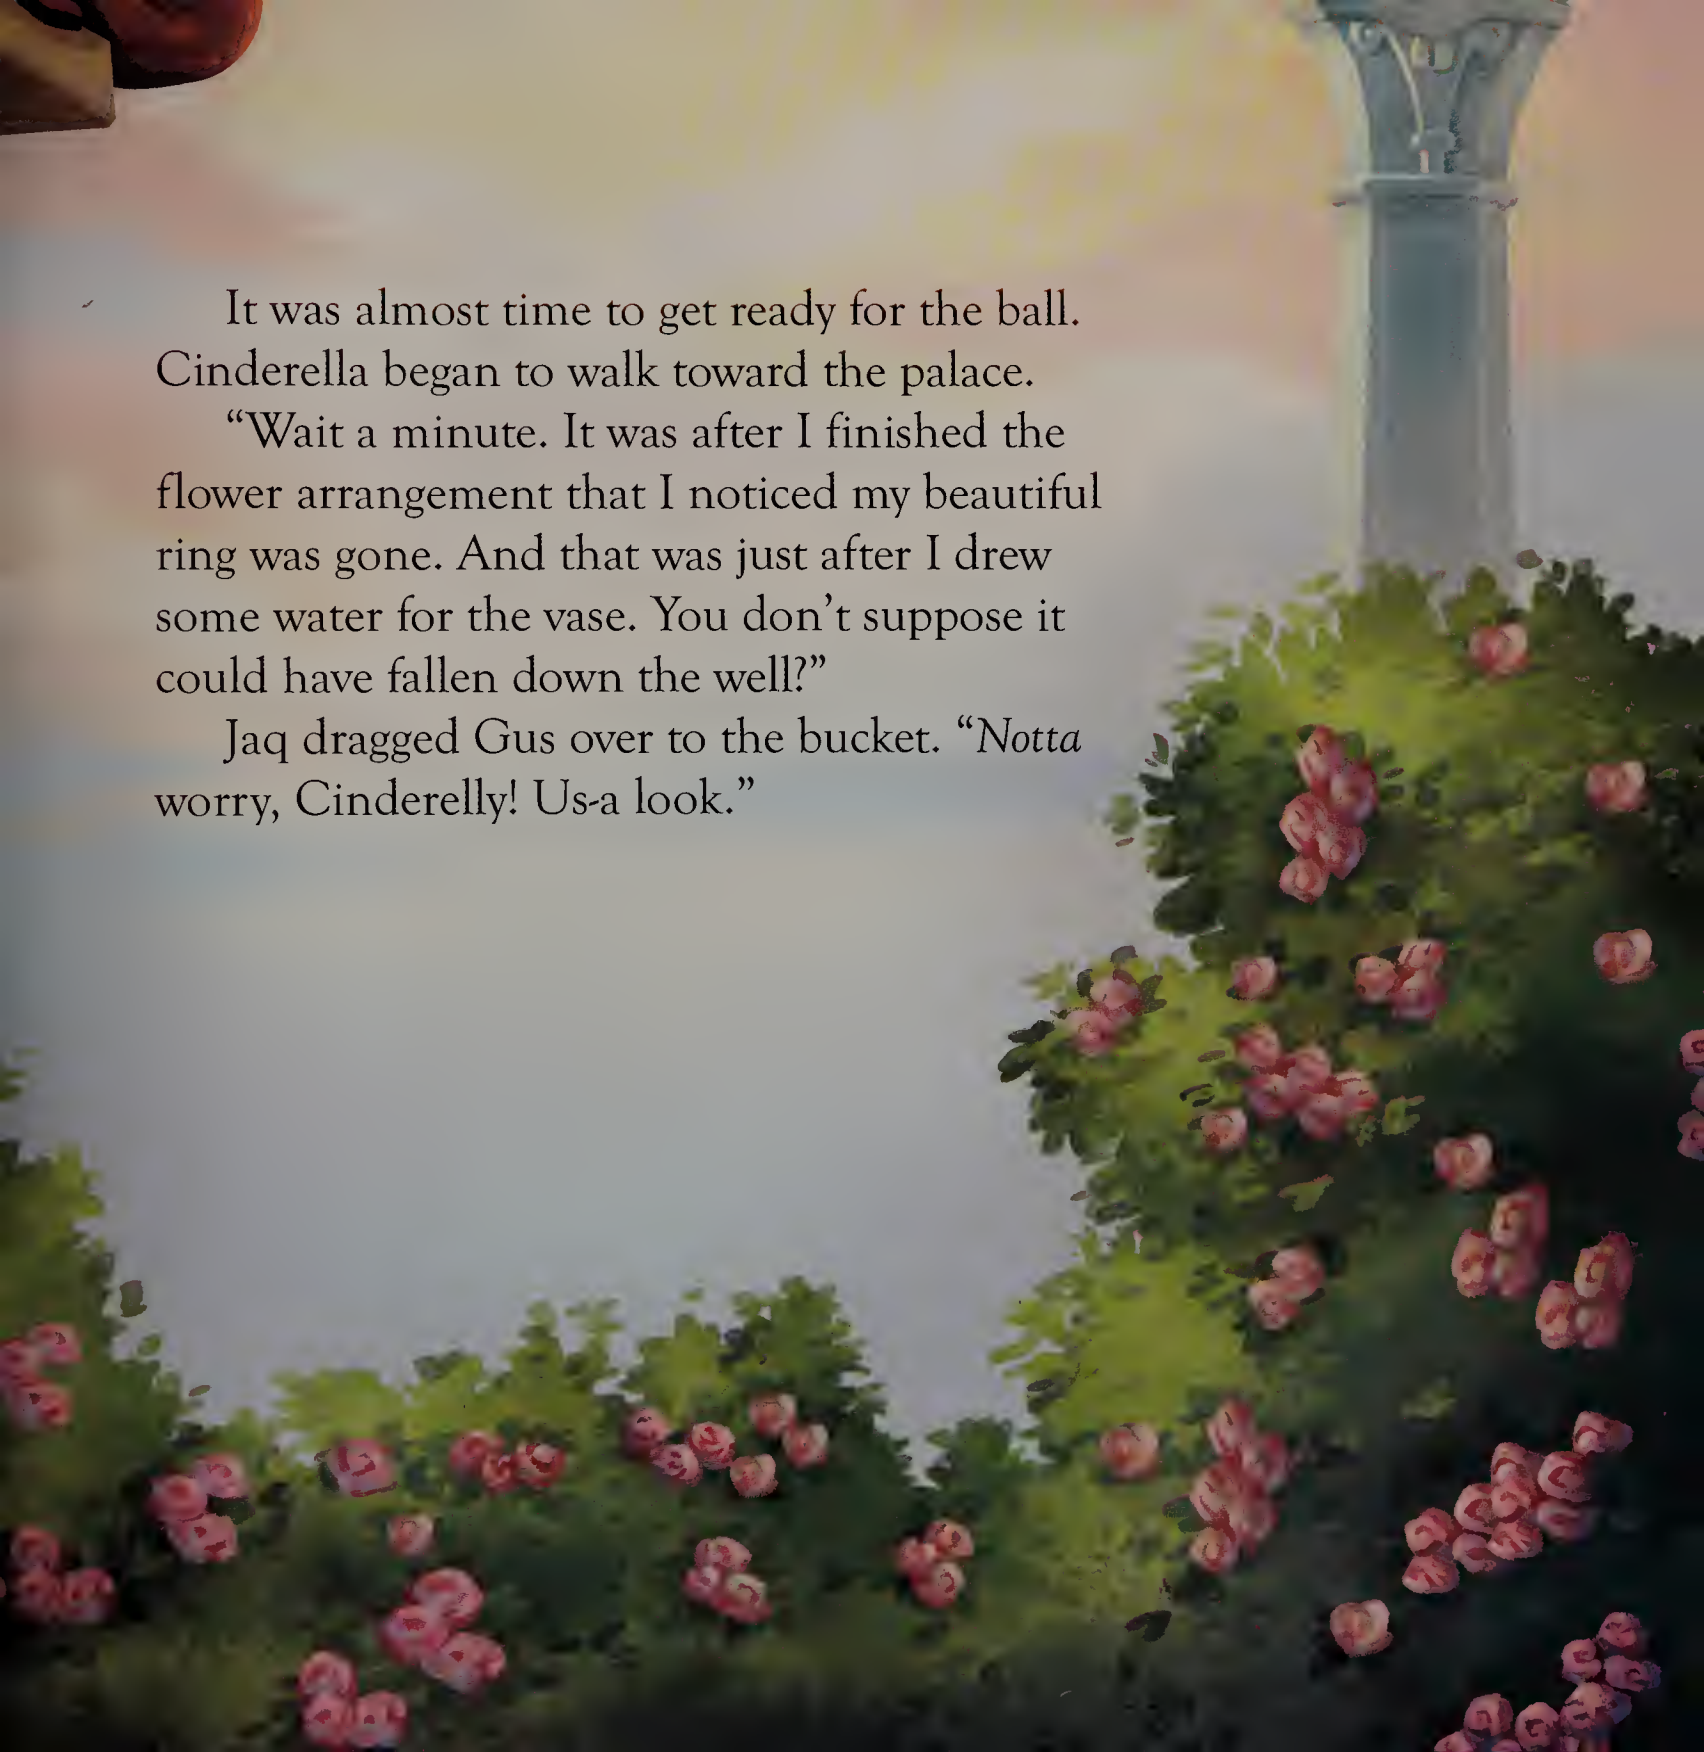
Cinderella and the mice went to the garden. Cinderella remembered she had been picking flowers for the ball there.

Gus searched the tulips. "Pretty, pretty." Jaq hopped onto a lily.

They searched each and every blossom . . . until Gus shouted, "Cinderelly!"

He scurried to the ground and picked up a shiny round object. "Ta-da!"

The princess shook her head. "That's just a marble."



It was almost time to get ready for the ball. Cinderella began to walk toward the palace.

"Wait a minute. It was after I finished the flower arrangement that I noticed my beautiful ring was gone. And that was just after I drew some water for the vase. You don't suppose it could have fallen down the well?"

Jaq dragged Gus over to the bucket. "Notta worry, Cinderelly! Us-a look."

Cinderella pulled up the bucket as fast as she could. "Thank goodness you're okay! What did you see down there?"

Gus smiled. "Uhh . . . Cinderelly's ring-ring!"

The princess clapped her hands together. "My heroes! You found it! And just in time."

That night at the anniversary ball, the Prince surprised Cinderella with a card and a heart-shaped box that held a sapphire bracelet. The mice each gave her a red rose.

Cinderella's heart was full of love—for her wonderful Prince and her devoted friends.
